Kevin O'Toole
Editor
Airline Business

Kevin O'Toole is the editor of Airline Business, the industry's leading strategic boardroom title. He took up the position in mid-1998 and was responsible for a major redesign of the magazine and the launch of a range of new products and studies. Those have included the highly successful Airline Strategy Awards and the Airline IT Trends Survey and Summit.

Prior to joining Airline Business he had worked for six years as business editor on sister magazine Flight International, where he established regular corporate coverage of the airline and aerospace industry.

Airline Business and Flight International, together with online service Air Transport Intelligence, are part of a growing portfolio of Flight Group aviation products within parent Reed Elsevier publishing group.

He had previously headed other business titles within the company, having worked as a journalist since graduating with a law degree from St Catherine's College Oxford, in 1983.

Kevin O'Toole is a familiar commentator on international media, including BBC and CNN news, and also regularly addresses industry forums and strategy discussion groups for a range of air transport bodies.
